

Estimate of the economic viability of a potential Riverina
State, utilizing publicly available information on the REMPPLAN website

<https://app.remplan.com.au/>

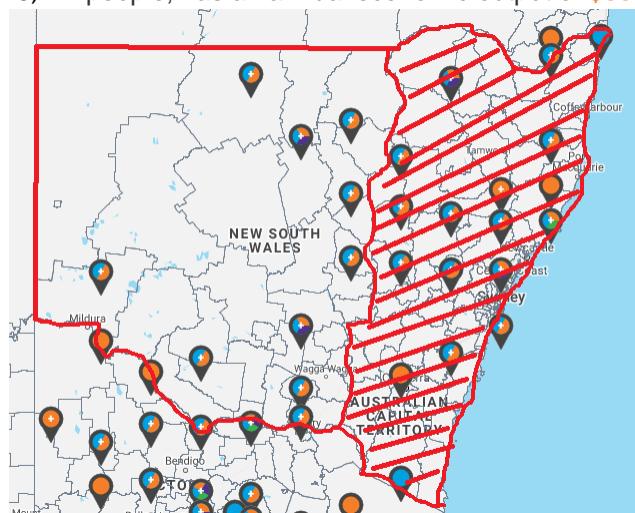

Tasmania for comparison:
Home to 534,457 people, Tasmania supports 215,294 jobs and has an annual economic output of $64.668 billion.

ACT and NT for comparison:
Home to 426,704 people, Australian Capital Territory supports 227,461 jobs and has an annual economic output of $73.082 billion
Home to 245,929 people, Northern Territory supports 109,663 jobs and has an annual economic output of $54.791 billion.

Potential Riverina State (Note: not all area's covered by REMPLAN currently):
Home to 573,274 people, has an annual economic output of $83.874 billion

Breakdown of information found for economic profiles of area's within proposed Riverina State, which provided the figures above.

Albury:

Home to 54,353 people, Albury supports 26,163 jobs and has an annual economic output of $7.880 billion.

Total = $83,874,630,000 – $83.874 billion

population = 573,274

Conclusion:

On face value, the potential Riverina State has a greater economic output than Tasmania, ACT and NT.
If those 3 State/Territories can function independently within the Federation, then so too could the Riverina.

Also for consideration, the above figures do not include all areas of the proposed Riverina State due to that information not being available, nor does it include Northern Victoria areas that may be included in the Riverina State. This in conjunction with more liberal policies surrounding the Timber and Irrigated Agricultural industries suggest that the Riverina's economic output could be even greater.
